
EQUIPMENT REFURBISHING PROGRAM

Equipment refurbishing represents a potential savings to cities and counties while also providing work skills to offenders that will help them in the reentry process. IPI's Rockwell City refurbishment center has a wide array of skilled workers and capable equipment to assist in the restoration process.

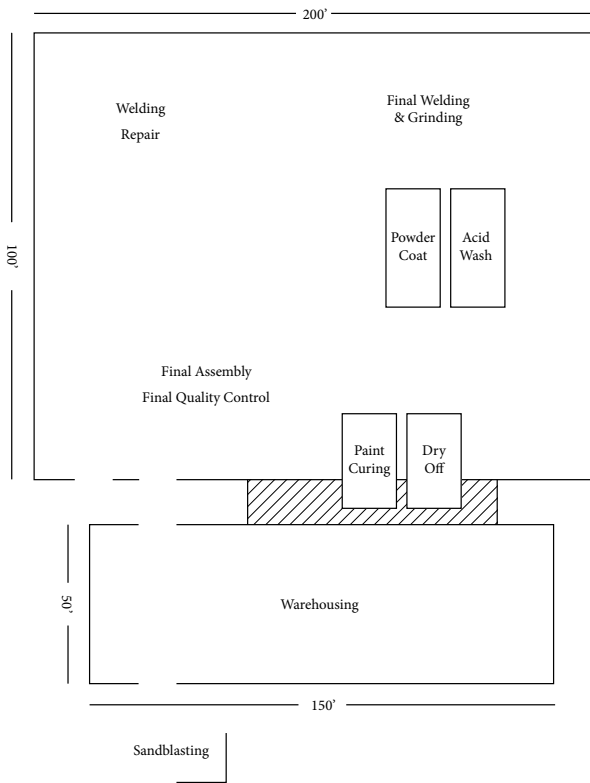

Every piece that enters the facility receives a careful disassembly, where individual pieces are examined for damage. Next, IPI fabricates new replacement parts that are comparable to or superior than original parts. New fabrications receive a detailed grinding, and are sandblasted using a selection of different grits of glass for a desired finish. An acid wash cleans the surface and protects against rust.

After a dry off process, the parts are powder coated and cured in a large oven for long-lasting coverage. The refurbished parts must pass tolerance and operation checks before reassembly. A final inspection and quality check ensures that the equipment will receive many more years of use.
